The employer, or a person appointed by the employer, is responsible for having a properly completed PPE inspection record. The record should be properly completed before the equipment is first issued for use. Using equipment that does not have a completed inspection record and a current annual inspection is prohibited by law! The inspector checks only the condition of the PPE and its conformity with its markings under current law. The inspector is not, however, responsible for linking it to the purchase documents and supply chain of the owner or user. The inspection result refers to the PPE at the time of the inspection: the equipment may be damaged at any time after the inspection, which the person carrying out the inspection cannot influence.
